A lark made her nest in a wheat field. There she laid her eggs. ¶ Soon she had a nest full of little larks. ¶ How hard the mother had to work! She flew here and there to get food for her hungry ones. ¶ Every day they grew larger and stronger. ¶ The wheat, too, was growing every day. Soon it would be ripe. Then the men would come to cut it.

Each morning the mother lark said, "Listen to all that is said in the field today, my dears. When I come home, tell me what you have heard."

"Mother, mother!" they chirped, "The farmer came here today with his son. He says this wheat is ripe and he has sent for his friends to come tomorrow to help cut it. ¶ We can not fly. We shall be caught! We shall be killed!"

"Do not be frightened", said the wise old lark. "You are still safe. If the farmer trusts to his friends the grain will not be cut tomorrow. Eat your supper and be still."

The next morning she said, "Watch for the farmer today. Be sure to tell me what he says."⁹ Then away she flew for food.

When she came back her little ones chirped, "Mother, the farmer has been here again today. He stayed a long time but his friends did not come. He sent his son to ask his cousins to come tomorrow.

⁹ "What shall we do?"

"We may stay here a while longer," said the mother lark. "His friends did not today nor will his cousins come tomorrow."

The next morning she again flew away to get food, but first she said, "Do not fail to tell me all you hear today."

That night the young larks chirped, "Mother, the farmer was here again this morning, but not one of his cousins came."

"What did he say?" asked the old lark.

"He said, Son, we will not trust to others any longer. The best way to get a thing done is to do it oneself. You and I will come tomorrow and cut this wheat."

"Oh! now we must go," said the mother lark. "When a man takes his work in his own hands, it is sure to be done. In the morning you must try your wings and we will leave this field."

The next morning the little larks tried their wings and they flew to the end of the field. There
