when the previous tenant pulled out. It has been without a truly old-fashioned general store for longer than that, said Ms. Jarrett.

She and Ms. McCobb look back to the days when it sold everything from homemade candles to homemade apple cobbler. Jane Cranston ran it then, about 10 years ago, and Ms. Jarrett said her vision will be based on Ms. Cranston's.

Pies And Pretty Things

A visit on Friday revealed that the inside of the store had been gutted, and found the pair working over the third version of the layout.

The fine details change from minute to minute — "It's a good thing I can draw," joked Ms. Jarrett — and planning stops intermittently as the two trade cuddles with Ms. McCobb's baby, Lena, but they do have a clear concept.

It involves green rocking chairs on the porch, a split-rail fence, wicker picnic baskets packed with lunch to go, and a menu ranging from popular breakfast specials to "salads with a Tuscan flair."

There will also be fresh produce, meats, a bakery featuring "interesting" breads as well as homemade cakes, pies, and pastries, and a small collection of "pretty things" — hanging baskets and bird feeders, and local crafts including jewelry and quilts.

For added atmosphere, the partners said they are counting on Lena, Ms. Jarrett's two Labrador retrievers, and the soothing sounds of the cappuccino machine.
